Artemisia 1998

The pictorial of the University of Nevada, Reno

John Ortman

Kristen Power

Although this book is titled Artemisia, it bears little resemblance to the yearbook you may know. This is not Artemisia---formerly the most criticized and least appreciated campus publication. This is Artemisia---reformed.

Artemisia has been denounced during the last decade as a high school yearbook that does not adequately represent the university. Sadly, the criticism was well deserved.

Knowing the importance of having a recorded history, we were determined this year not to let weak photography and boring layout ruin the book once again---making it impossible for the book to be an interesting and representative record of students' lives.

Influenced by the superb Artemisia pictorials of the 1970s, we recruited our talented staff from the art and journalism departments. Using photography, we set out to artistically document this university and its far-reaching influences.

Many people have worked hard to reform the Artemisia.

Please enjoy the book.

Comment: I would like to see a Copy Service, a Dry Cleaning Store, a Hair Salon and a Nail Salon in the JTSU.

Response: A Copy Service is already planned, it should be open by the beginning of the Spring Semester. A comprehensive survey of the campus community will be conducted soon to assess the services desired for the JTSU.

Comment: The coin insert for the foosball table is broken.

Response: Thanks for the notice, it has been repaired. Next time, please inform the person working at the JTSU Information Cente

Comment: We need more computers in the Computer Lab.

August

• The DeLamare Library opened—it was a consolidation of the old Engineering and Mines Libraries. DeLamare was named after Grover Whitby "Dee" DeLamare, a 1938 graduate of the school of mines and prominent Nevada miner.

• To raise money for new library chairs, Lacy J. Dalton, Mills Lane and other celebrities read poetry in the quad to a small paying audience.

• JoAnn Cox, the newly selected coach for UNR's first female golf team in 19 years, quit unexpectedly to take a head coaching position at New Mexico State. The team continued with Tom Duncan, director of golf, as substitute coach.

• ASUN bought 214 telescoping chairs for Lawlor Events Center. The chairs cost $92,000.

September

• A high-tech security system with pass keys and video cameras was planned to be installed in campus buildings.

• Kay Gooch replaced Mary Shea as the Wolf Pack's cross county ski coach.

• The Honor Court, a series of stone pillars and obelisks with a Victorian Gazebo and bubbling fountain, was finally completed and dedicated. Over 1,000 names of people who have made substantial contributions to the university were carved in the stone. The court cost more than $1 million dollars, but was paid for entirely by private donations.

• Garth Brooks performed to sold-out crowds in Lawlor Events Center.

• UNLV student body president, Joe Mills, was accused of malfeasance and nonfeasance. The matter was referred to an impeachment committee.

• Seven members of Tau Kappa Epsilon were arrested on charges of grand theft, felony destruction and conspiracy when police discovered stolen shrubs and foliage from the Rancho San Rafeal arboretum in their fraternity house. TKE issued a written statement saying that they took full responsibility for the damages to the natural conservatory, totaling $7,000.

The sanctions recommended by the University Review Board included 2,000 hours of community service for chapter members, full compensation to Rancho San Rafael, termination of all house operations unless a live-in advisor was named and revocation of voting status in the InterFraternity Council.

September cont'd...

• Patricia Miltenburger, vice president for Student Services, resigned after 10 years in her post.

• Campus fraternities and sororities held their bi-annual community cleanup in the residential areas near the university.

• Erica Jones, a three-year ASUN Arts and Sciences Senator, resigned. In a letter to the editor, Jones wrote that she needed to concentrate on her academic life.

October

• John Burch, professor of accounting and computer information services, was arrested on two misdemeanor counts of making threatening calls to the chairman and the dean of the College of Business Administration.

• Curtis Sliwa, founding member of the "Guardian Angels" and Steve Hager, editor of "High Times" magazine debated the legalization of marijuana in the student union. The event, titled "Heads vs. the Feds," drew nearly 200 spectators, some of which became emotional and verbally hostile to Sliwa. Every student who spoke or asked questions was in favor of marijuana legalization.

• Monique Washington became the first black Homecoming Queen at this university. Washington was supported by the Ethnic Student Alliance and other organizations. Her King was Vincent Lim.

• A new record of 7,000 cans of food was set during the Homecoming food drive.

• Earl Greene, ASUN Executive Vice President, made a formal request to faculty to reuse textbooks.

November

• Two students living in Lincoln hall were arrested after one of them allegedly called a crisis phone line, saying that he had a gun and was suicidal. Police found marijuana, drug paraphernalia and a .22 pistol in their room.

Campus News

January

• Sgt. George Sullivan of the University of Nevada Police Department was murdered Jan. 13, near the university entrance by Morrill Hall. Authorities said that Sullivan was beaten to death.

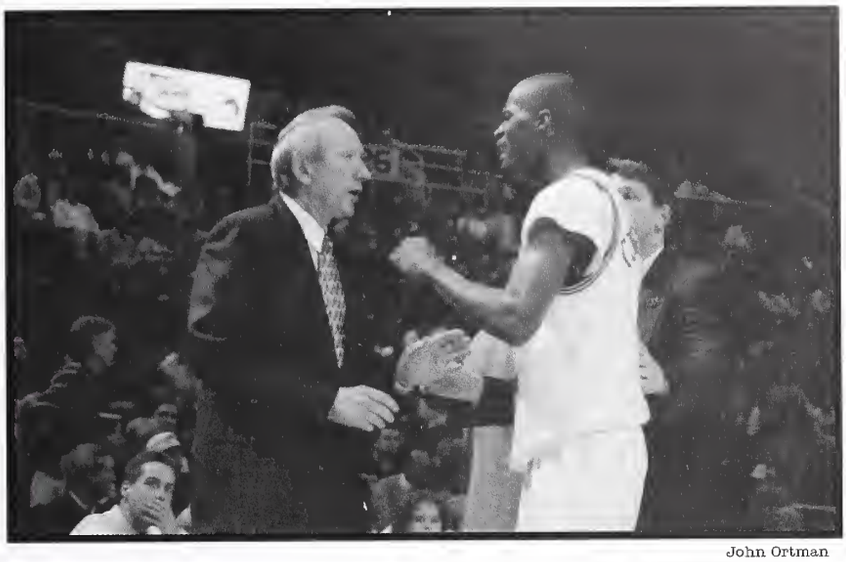
Sullivan's gunbelt and master keys to the university were gone. A massive manhunt ensued and the entire university was closed for a day. The search ended in Salt Lake City where police took murder suspect Siaosi Vanisi into custody.

The university changed the locks to the outer doors on all university buildings to ensure campus safety

Sullivan had worked with the UNPD for 19 years. He was married and had five children.

February

• Campus residence halls considered extending their ban on smoking to include the interior of students' rooms.



John Ortman

Professor Robert Hooper, 59, disappeared while hiking on Peavine mountain. He was never found. Hooper taught mathematics and computer sciences.

• Taco Bell came to campus. An Express Taco Bell restaurant replaced the Carlos Peppers franchise on the bottom floor of the business building.

• 25 drag queens performed at a Valentine's Day fundraiser for the School of Social Work's Diversity Scholarship Fund. Despite extra security costs, enough money was raised for two scholarships.

• Senator Harry Reid visited campus and signed copies of his book, "Searchlight: The Camp That Didn't Fall."

• Students bared their butts again on the quad at the "Moon Off" in an attempt to break the world record of the most bare behinds in one place at one time.

March

• Nevada men's and women's basketball teams suffered losses at the Big West Tournement.

The men lost 67-62 in the 2nd round to the Pacific Tigers.

The women also lost in the second roundto their opponents, the UC Santa Barbara Gauchos.

• Danny Glover and Felix Justice came to campus to present "An Evening with Langston & Martin," a re-inactment of the works of Dr., Martin Luther King and poet, Langston Hughes.

Editor's Note

I was asked once by a sorority member why this book does not have a "Greek" section.

Let me explain.

Students' lives are not limited to their academic and extracurricular activities--they extend beyond artificial categories. A student on a swimming scholarship certainly has a life outside of her team, her coach and the pool. Likewise, a fraternity brother might be a biochemistry student who is proficient at Yoga and chess. To reflect this reality, we discarded typical sections like "Greeks," "Sports" and "Dorm Life."

Free from the confinements of boring sections, we were able to create a much more representative pictorial. Universities are hodgepodges--medleys if you will. This is what we wanted to represent.

Such departures from standard yearbook practices became normal occurrences throughout the year. Dissatisfied with recent yearbooks, we filled this one with unconventional approaches and risks.

The process that made this book is comparable to an avalanche; it started with a small movement and grew rapidly into a far-reaching phenomenon.

Cayenna Johnson, my assistant editor, saw a copy of the 1976 Artemisia and was impressed with its strong photography and artistic display format. She told me about it while I was already tinkering with the idea of running for editor. I knew that the burden of being editor would be huge and, if I decided to emulate the 1976 book, my experience as a section editor for the 1997 Artemisia would be almost useless. I would be blazing my own trail.

How right I was. One of the hardest things we had to do was convince others that a change was needed. I'm not sure that we ever succeeded.

Finding a like-minded staff was an easier task. We found a small army of independent thinking students who were also dissatisfied with normality.

Although the staff and I sometimes disagreed over the content of this book, we always kept the same goal—representing the university in an interesting and artistic way. Acting out of genuine concern, we often argued and agonized over large and small decisions.

We quickly learned that artistic representation is a very difficult route to take. Finding a consensus on what is aesthetic, what is fair representation and what is interesting is a time consuming and delicate process. Did I mention how long it takes and how quickly decisions can be reversed? Oh, another thing—it's painstakingly slow and can change as suddenly as a kaleidoscope pattern.

We admit that our creation has mistakes. A question for the trivia-minded reader: Can you identify the photograph that was printed twice?

We also admit that we've done good work. Just yesterday someone said that this issue is "the first real annual in a decade." How can I not be pleased?

Perhaps what I am most proud of is the personal nature of our work. Look closely. Can you see our struggles, our humor and our thoughts?

Do you see us in the way that we see you?

Time alone will tell, but I think that we have awakened a dying art on this campus. It doesn't matter if others continue in this manner, but it is crucial that others continue to be innovative with this publication.

I offer my support and admiration to the people who shape Artemisia in the future.
